The COVID-19 pandemic has raised many questions and varying perspectives in relation to people's choice around vaccination.

As we enter the next phase of the pandemic and the Queensland borders open, the risk of contracting COVID-19 increases significantly. Vaccination is one of many strategies to reduce the spread and minimise the risk of severe illness, hospitalisation and death from COVID-19.

As of November 2021, the Melbourne Institute research indicates that currently 11.5% of the Australian population is experiencing hesitancy toward receiving COVID-19 vaccinations. In Queensland the hesitancy rate is 25% of the adult population. - Vaccine Hesitancy Tracker
